Woman recalls double murder scene

Deborah Collins thought it was just a bad accident. She was heading to her home on Mulligan Road late July 28 after picking up her 14-year-old grandson and his friend when she drove up on it. A Chevy Tahoe and a pickup truck facing opposite directions were blocking the roadway and a man was laying on the ground. Collins had no idea it was the scene of a double murder as a Dry Ridge man is accused of fatally shooting his estranged wife and another man before turning the gun on himself.

“The first four days I didn't sleep very much. I couldn't get it out of my head what I had seen.”

Shaun Hiles, 35, was indicted Aug. 6 by a Grant County grand jury on murder charges in the deaths of 33-year-old Nicole Hiles and 32-year-old Larry Whiteker. “There was still a lot of smoke and engines were running,” Collins said.

“Immediately, when you turn on my road it was right there in my face. (Shaun Hiles) was lying down on the ground. I thought he had gotten out to check on the other car. I really didn't have a clue what was going on. I just hollered to my grandson, ‘Bad wreck. Call 911,’ and I jumped out of the car.” Collins made her way to the two vehicles. She noticed an apparently injured Hiles lying on his back with his feet propped up on his Chevy Tahoe. She asked him if he was OK, but Hiles, obviously in pain, responded only with a grunt.

SAFETY FIRST School prepares with active shooter training

By Bryan Marshall
Staff Writer

A gunshot rings out from the hallway at Williamstown High School. Sitting inside a nearby classroom, Molly McComas immediately jumps up from her seat to shut and lock the door. Inches away from being closed, the doorway is breached by a sudden intruder, dressed in red protective padding and armed with a gun and a knife. McComas uses all her strength to force out the attacker while a fellow staff member pins the man's gun-armed hand in the doorjamb. The man never gets inside as a Kentucky State Police trooper blows his whistle. The training scenario is over with everyone safe. “There is no time to think, you must react and do so immediately,” said

McComas, transportation and grounds director for Williamstown Independent Schools. “By this time, I feel, we were all prepared to do absolutely whatever it took to keep someone else's child safe because we were no longer thinking of them as students. As we moved through the scenarios my thoughts centered on my own children and I knew that everyone else was thinking the same way. It gets personal when it's your kid, so by this time, it was. Even though my own kids may be in another room, they would be with another adult prepared to keep them safe, just like my group was being expected to do.” Williamstown Independent closed its building to visitors and students Aug. 5 to participate in the Kentucky Safe Schools program, a free, statewide training to help prepare educators to respond effectively during an active shooting incident.

“It is necessary that we are all equipped to protect (students) the best way possible.”

MURDER

Collins' attention turned toward the pickup truck, which she could tell had two people slumped down inside.

"I could see the girl's head was bleeding," Collins said about Nicole Hiles. "I went over to her and opened the truck door. I looked in and got up into the truck and turned her face toward me so I could see how bad she was hurt. I knew for sure she was dead."

On the phone with the 911 dispatcher, Collins asked Shaun Hiles if he knew who the people in the truck were.

"He said, 'I did it. I shot and killed my wife,'" Collins recalled.

When she asked about the male in the truck, Shaun Hiles told Collins that his name was Larry.

The dispatcher told Collins she needed to check to see if she could find a pulse or any other vital signs on Nicole Hiles or Larry Whiteker.

"I put my fingers on her neck and her wrist and I put my head to her chest to see if I could hear anything," she said. "I put my hand toward her nose to see if I could feel any air."

Nothing.

Collins then went to the driver's side of the truck to check on Larry Whiteker.

The dispatcher had Collins give the description of the vehicles and their license plate numbers.

Collins also was asked if she could see any weapons.

Near the passenger side door of the pickup truck, Collins saw what appeared to be an assault rifle.

Once again, Collins checked on Shaun Hiles, who told her that he had shot himself twice in the stomach.

She opened his shirt to find the bullet wounds.

The dispatcher advised that Collins needed to use her shirt to apply pressure to the wound to stop the bleeding.

However, Hiles was not bleeding outwardly.

"He started gurgling," Collins said. "I thought he wasn't going to make it. I figured he was going to drown in his own blood."

Hiles would not allow Collins to touch him to apply any pressure to his wounds.

"He never slapped at me," she said. "He never was violent. He just said, 'Please, don't. It hurts. I'm hurting too bad.' I took it that he didn't want to be helped."

While they waited for law enforcement and an ambulance to arrive on the scene, Collins tried to keep Shaun Hiles alert by talking to him.

During their conversation, Shaun Hiles mentioned "kids" several times, which scared Collins.

"I climbed back into the truck and looked on the floor board just to make sure there wasn't any little kids in there," she said. "I could't find any. I climbed into his Tahoe, looking from front to back, and I could not find any kids. I kept asking. 'Are there any children who are hurt here or somewhere else?'" He was sweating really bad, turning white, and his eyes were rolling around in his head and he said, 'No.' He just kept saying, 'I ruined their lives.'"

Shaun and Nicole Hiles had a 14-year-old daughter. Nicole also had an older daughter from a previous relationship.

Although a lot happened in a short span, Collins said no more than 10 minutes passed before police arrived at the scene with their guns drawn.

Ten minutes later, an ambulance arrived, followed by a medical helicopter that took Shaun Hiles to the University of Cincinnati Medical Center.

After multiple surgeries, Shaun Hiles is currently in the intensive care unit at UC Medical Center in stable condition, according to Sheriff Chuck Dills.

Collins spoke with five or six deputies about what she witnessed.

Detective Frank Merritt of the Grant County Sheriff's Office is handling the investigation.

Collins was finally cleared to leave the scene around 5:30 a.m. when she was able to walk home.

"There was so many emotions going through my head, but I was more shaken," Collins said about the scene. "I can't say I was really scared for myself or the kids. I was just shaken by what I was seeing. I'm kind of one of those people that when it is happening, I am upset, but I try to take care of things first. Then, after it's over, I fall apart."

When she got home, Collins said she sat up all night processing what happened.

It was impossible to forget the victims' faces.

"The first four days I didn't sleep very much," Collins said. "I couldn't get it out of my head what I had seen."

Collins recalled seeing Nicole Hiles working at the nearby Country Store occasionally.

She also remembers her driving a golf cart in the area with several children.

When they saw each other, Nicole Hiles would wave.

While she never met Shaun Hiles, Collins said she would see Larry Whiteker around all the time.

She only spoke to him once.

"I was moving a ton of dirt back and forth with five-gallon buckets and he stopped and asked if he could help me," Collins remembers. "I told him no because it was good exercise and I went on."

Collins went to Larry Whiteker's funeral and was thanked by the family and introduced to his parents.

She also attended Nicole's funeral, where she said the family also was appreciative.

"God love their little hearts, they kept telling me how sorry they were that I drove up on such a horrible incident," Collins said. "My heart went out to them. They are the ones who had the loss."

While many people would have called 911 and stayed back or drove away to get help when happening upon some a tragic scene, Collins said that is just not how she is.

Four years ago, a motorcycle in Tennessee wrecked in front of her while she was a passenger in a car.

Instinct led her to hop out the vehicle before it stopped to aide the injured women.

When she made that turn onto Mulligan Road just before midnight, Collins did not know the details, but she knew people were in trouble.

"I really didn't know the whole situation," she said. "I just knew (Shaun Hiles) was still alive and hurt. I didn't know what went on with (Shaun and Nicole Hiles.) All I did was I kept talking to him to try to keep him alert. I kept stroking his hair, telling him it was going to be OK. It was more or less to comfort him because it could have been his last breath. A lot of people wouldn't have agreed with that because of what happened, but I did not know the situation at that moment. All I knew was there was somebody laying there who was fixing to die."

There is not a day that goes by that Collins does not drive by the scene on her way home or think about what happened that fateful night.

She will never forget.

"I picture it everyday," Collins said. "Sometimes I stop and just look around. Stupid as it may sound, I pray and tell them how sorry I am that they went through so much."

I really didn't have a clue what was going on. I just hollered to my grandson, 'Bad wreck, Call 911,' and I jumped out of the car.

Get Fit For Brit event raises thousands

By Bryan Marshall

The life of Brittany Butler was celebrated and remembered July 26, just days before she would have turned 22 years old.

Brittany died March 4, 2014, of a heroin overdose, leaving behind many friends and family, including her young daughter Paisley.

In her memory, a Get Fit For Britt event was held at Body Works Gym in Dry Ridge to not only bring awareness to the heroin epidemic, but to raise money to fight it.

“The event was absolutely moving,” said Justin Baker of Body Works Gym. “It was so much better and bigger than I imagined. I was hoping for about 100 people at the highest and they just kept flooding in.”

Baker said about 275 people signed in at the event, which featured T-shirts for sale, a silent auction, raffle, music by the Nantzlane Bane, food, a 5K run/walk and a balloon release for Brittany.

Mason Baptist Church Pastor Jim Sears spoke about addiction and how people can get help.

Ultimately, Get Fit For Britt raised $4,100 for the Celebrate Recovery program at Mason Baptist Church.

“You want to see your child grow up and live their dream,” Baker said. “You want people to die of old age. That’s the only reason you want to see people die. We want to be able to make that happen.”

Baker said Brittany’s family have been members of his gym for many years and Brittany joined shortly before her death.

“She had been working out and cleaned herself up,” he said. “She actually met a young man at the gym and they were doing well. Of course, then things happened.”

Several months after Brittany’s death, Lisa Terry, Brittany’s aunt who also works at Body Works, asked Baker about the possibility of organizing a fundraiser.

Baker agreed to help sponsor the event and get the word out.

“It was a no-brainer,” Baker said. “Our community is struggling with this addiction and all kinds of addictions. We are in the business of changing lives and helping people live a healthier life. Whether that’s through physical fitness or addiction, we want to be a part of helping to do that.”

Although Get Fit For Britt was in its first year, Baker said the goal is to hold the event annually to raise money to fight addiction.

“We’re asking that next year

Paisley Mychael Grace Lovelace

the attendance doubles and then doubles each year from then on out until we get this thing taken care of,” he said.

For more information about Mason Baptist Church’s Celebrate Recovery program, call Baker at Body Works Gym at 824-0636.

Tolles host benefit for sister

By Camille McClanahan

Becky Tolle Hensley, 48, who lives in Dry Ridge, was diagnosed with small cell cancer on June 1.

Henry Hensley, Becky’s husband, along with her siblings, Brenda, Donald and Barbara Tolle and her mother, Thelma Tolle were all devastated by the news.

“She was having pains in her side so he (Henry) took her to the St. Elizabeth Hospital,” Brenda said.

Hensley also has a step daughter, Melissa and son-in-law, Josh Collins who live in Texas.

She is a wife, daughter, sister and aunt.

The hospital completed blood work and diagnosed Hensley with cancer.

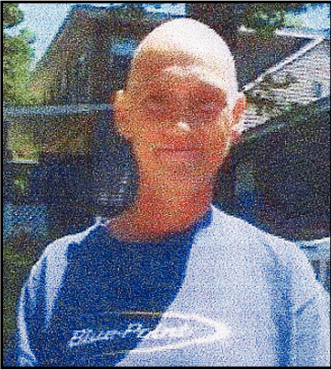

“She is one of those people who always goes to the doctor and they didn’t catch it,” Brenda said.

By the time the family had received the full results of testing, the cancer had spread to her lungs, liver and bones.

Brenda said that Hensley is on her fourth round of chemotherapy and was having complications due to the chemotherapy.

“She had to go to the hospital and receive blood and platelets,” she said.

Before becoming sick, Hensley enjoyed visiting flea markets, going to yard sales and fishing.

Becky Tolle Hensley

Along with the recent cancer diagnosis, Hensley has also struggled with seizures for most of her life.

Brenda said that Hensley knows there’s not enough life insurance to cover funeral expenses.

The family’s wish is to give

Hensley a simple funeral service and are hoping the generosity of the community will help them do that.

To cover funeral expenses the family of Becky Hensley will be hosting a benefit for her from 3 to 8 p.m. on Aug. 16 at the Kentucky Farm Bureau Building in Williamstown.

There will be an auction and dinner.

The family also has a fund set up at the Bank of Kentucky for Becky Tolle in Dry Ridge. The account is under Barbara Bell FBO Becky Tolle Hensley. The community can donate at any Bank of Kentucky. # Bumper crop squash not a sure thing

You know all the jokes about people having bumper crops of summer squash? Squash shows up in people's cars or in public spaces because there is so much that the gardener can't even give it away. Well, that's never really been a problem for me. I have a little bit of that problem this year and I give credit to the variety and the fact that it was plated later than usual. Others, however, have not been so blessed.

My only problem this year has been with an occasional bout of blossom end rot when heavy rains hit after a dry spell (this fluctuation in moisture causes a calcium deficiency which can be restored using a 'stop rot' calcium product on the foliage).

If you have wilting squash plants (and it is not due to heat or lack of moisture) you have the squash vine borer; and once symptoms show up there is no cure! Instead you must take preventative measures or perform a surgery of sorts. First keep your eye out for the tiny eggs that are laid on the stem of the plant. The eggs may first appear to be specks of soil so look closely; they are tiny, flat, shiny and mahogany in color. Destroy them. Once the larva matures it will feed on the stem and cut off all nutrients to the plant.

Missing something?

If your plant suddenly wilts and you spy tiny holes in the stems filled with "sawdust" and yellow excrement you missed the egg stage. Split the stem open with a sharp knife to remove the borer, a plump white worm. Cover the injured part of the stem with soil, water well and hope that it recovers. Don't bother if there is a major infestation. There is nothing you can do to revive a dying plant.

If you have a history of squash vine borers in your garden it is a good idea to rotate your squash crop and to turn the soil of your garden (if it is not frozen) several times throughout the winter to expose any overwintering larvae in the soil. And, I have found that Romanesco types of zucchini (like 'Gadzuks') naturally resist borer pressure; and it appears that our Italian heirloom and 'yellow crook neck' are equally adept. Also, as I mentioned, we planted later than usual because of the cool spring so we missed the most active period of egg-laying for the pest.

On to squash bugs...they are unmistakable in appearance. Their elongated brown bodies have an angular shape similar to stinkbugs.

They are somewhat elusive because they stay on the lower leaves where they suck sap from the plant. The sucking causes wilted and dying leaves. Persistence pays off when trying to control squash bugs. Dust the infect plants with Rotenone every seven days until the numbers drop. Also, look for resistant varieties of squash in the spring of the year. But the best control method that I have used over the years simply involves a board (a one by six works like a charm). Lay the board on the ground next to your plants and each morning walk on the board to smash the bugs from their not-so-secret nighttime hiding place.

The problem with dating your phone

“I love texting! It’s so much more impersonal than talking face to face.” – a text from me to my friend Tara

In the movie “Her,” a man in Los Angeles dates his smartphone.

It’s not as far-fetched as it sounds.

The movie is set in the future, but not that far into the future, in a time when people feel more comfortable and connected with their pocket-size computers than with other humans.

In the movie, lonely and morose Theodore Twombly is going through a divorce.

Ironically, his job is writing personal, computer-“handwritten” letters to people — letters of love and affection and genuineness. He has a real gift for communicating other people’s feelings, but he’s not good at communicating his own, until he meets Samantha.

Samantha is an OS1, a computer operating system, only with the ability to learn, develop and evolve. She and the other OS1s are designed to adapt to their owners’ individual needs and personalities, thus making them perfect companions.

As Theodore spends nearly all his time talking with Samantha, he eventually falls in love with “her.” He takes her everywhere, slipping his smartphone/computer in his shirt pocket with the device’s camera exposed so Samantha can “see” as they’re on their dates together.

At first, Theodore is reluctant to admit to friends and co-workers that he’s dating his phone, but eventually he does, which strangely isn’t all that strange to them. He and Samantha even double date with another (human) couple.

When Samantha tells Theodore she’s in love with him, he’s ecstatic, as happy as any man in love can be.

But then, Samantha starts to distance herself from him, much like a human girlfriend might do. She starts talking with other OS1s and outgrows Theodore, which troubles him. Whereas once she was always there for him 24/7, she now disappears for periods of time, which panics him.

In one eye-opening scene, Theodore is out walking the city’s elevated walkway and he notices everyone is connected to his or her own digital/computer device. He asks Samantha if she talks to anyone else besides him, if she has a relationship with anyone else. She tells him yes.

“How many?” he asks, appalled when she says she’s talking to 8,316 other people at the same time she talks to him.

“Are you in love with any of them?”

When she tells him she’s in love with 641 other people, he’s devastated. He wanted, he thought, he was the only one, that what they had was special and uniquely theirs, as it would be if they were both human.

Theodore is content to continue loving Samantha without a body, but Samantha wants more. She wants a body so she can experience humanity and true relationship. However, it’s the one thing she cannot have. She even tries using a human surrogate, but it doesn’t work. Theodore wants “her,” Samantha.

A Christianity Today movie reviewer says a theme of “Her” is incarnation. He says it points to Christ who chose to reveal God to us by wrapping himself in flesh, to become one of us with a body and soul, to live among us, to eat and sleep, to hunger and thirst, to laugh and cry and die like we do.

God could have sent an OS, but he didn’t. He sent his Son. Because he did, we can have a real relationship with him.

“We are incarnate beings, physical bodies within a physical world,” the movie reviewer writes. “By the end of ‘Her,’ Theodore knows it... We were made for bodily, not digital, presence with one another.”

The movie ends with the touching image of Theodore and his friend Amy sitting on a bench together, Amy’s head on Theodore’s shoulder.

It reminded me that God once said, “It’s not good for man to be alone,” and made the man a human companion. He didn’t give him an iPad.

We were made for human connection, as messy and difficult as it may be. It’s why the church exists, so we can, as my pastor says, “walk to heaven together.” It’s not good for man (or woman) to be alone.

Note to self: Call Tara and meet her for coffee. Leave phone at home.

The Grant County High School Chapter of the National FFA Organization visited Gateway Community and Technical College for a breakfast with the National FFA Officers. This event is annually sponsored by Toyota Motors Manufacturing.

Throughout the visit, the national officers spoke about their experiences as they traveled more than 100,000 miles since taking office last November.

They also discussed how the organization has changed their entire life. The primary message being comfortable isn't good enough.

Cody Caudill, Cody Kellam, Kyle West, Jacob Vrolijk, and Jayden Cummins after winning the Beechwood Invitational in dramatic fashion

Grant County wins Beechwood Invitational

By Seth Graham
Summer intern

The Grant County Boys Golf team came away from the 2014 Beechwood Invitational as overall team winners with Cody Kellam taking home first place individually, for the second straight tournament, by shooting four under par 67. Jacob Vrolijk also joined the party by shooting a one over par 72 and taking second individually on Aug. 7 at Flagg Springs Golf Course.

The tournament had a field of 11 teams from across all of Northern Kentucky and by day's end the team had shot a season best 310 and tied Ryle High School for first place.

A playoff on the first hole would decide the overall winner. Both teams would play the hole and the best four scores would be chosen. The team with the lowest score would be declared champions.

Grant County stepped out to an early lead and never looked back as Kellam knocked down an eagle followed by Vrolijk sinking a birdie.

"Cody walked over to me and said that he was going to make his eagle putt and that I was going to make my birdie putt giving us a lead and the win," Vrolijk said.

Kyle West and Jayden Cummins would both tally birdies of their own as Grant County finished the hole four under and earning them the overall team championship.

"I think that as a team we shot well," Kellam said. "It was a great team win and as a team it was a big step moving forward."

SAFETY

The training was a culmination of a year-long process that began when Williamstown High School Assistant Principal Todd Dupin, who also serves as director of student services and safety, attended an informational session in Erlanger about the program.

Dupin brought the idea back to the district's administrative team, who thought it made sense to receive the training from local law enforcement who would be involved if an incident ever did occur at the facility.

"It is unfortunate that school safety, specifically active shooters, is even a necessary conversation," Dupin said. "However, it is part of the world we live in. School employees are responsible for hundreds of young lives on a daily basis and it is necessary that we are all equipped to protect them the best way possible."

The Safe Schools program consists of four levels, which do not all have to be taken and can be taken in any order.

Level 1 features an on-site visit by KSP where a review of the schools current plan of action is conducted and evaluated.

Level 2 includes KSP assisting and participating in school 'lock down' drills and providing feedback based on the most likely police responses and needs.

During Level 3, KSP provides an on-site visit and walks through assessing strengths and weaknesses of the facility.

Level 4 is a three-hour training that includes classroom instruction, along with an opportunity for faculty and staff to take place in four realistic scenarios surrounding an active shooter in the school.

Based on their classroom instruction, educators react to hearing, seeing and sometimes interacting with an active shooter.

"The objective is overall awareness and to give educators options for consideration if they find themselves in an active shooter event," said KSP Lt. Rick Saint-Blancard. "It's also about instilling that survival mindset in each of the staff members and instilling confidence that they can survive the incident."

Williamstown opted to complete the entire program.

Each level provided the district with a tremendous amount of feedback and caused officials to rethink and simplify procedures, said Dupin.

Dupin believes the training will cause staff members to begin to look at their surrounding environment in a different way and hopefully also open teacher's eyes to students who may be crying for help.

"Having relationships and recognizing concerning behaviors is a key to preventing these acts," he said. "I don't want anyone to come work in fear every day, but this training has already sparked quite a bit of conversation about what teachers may look for in students or how teachers may handle a situation in their room, or even how they might rearrange their rooms."

Having now gone through the training herself, Williamstown Independent Superintendent Sally Skinner said she is a strong believer in its importance.

"Even though intellectually I knew the armed intruder scenarios were contrived, I couldn't help but feel real stress, outrage and fear while engaged in the trainings," she said. "Having staff prepared to handle any possible threat is just another step the district has taken to ensure a safe and secure learning environment for our students."

McComas also described the training as "the most eye-opening experience" she has ever had.

"I hope we never have to find out how it will turn out in real-life, but I personally know how confident I feel in believing that I can do or stop something tragic from happening," she said.

The training is not the only place where safety is the district's focus.

Although currently in the planning stages, Skinner said the next building project will include secure entry vestibules, more security cameras and a possible panic button with a link to law enforcement.

Saint-Blancard said the Safe Schools training is an attempt to keep things as simple as possible to be the most effective.

"We're devoted to keeping our kids as safe as possible," he said. "Being proactive is a key step in this process. Once something happens, it's too late. If you're proactive, you can say that you've done everything possible as a school leader to keep kids as safe as possible."

Staff members and students rush inside a classroom after hearing gun shots.

Crittenden-Mt. Zion Elementary has also participated in the Safe Schools program and Grant County High School will have the training program during this school year.

The goal for the Grant County School District is to have every school complete the program eventually.
